PREFACE

In 1961, the University of Illinois Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations published Labor History in the United States: A General Bibliography by Gene S. Stroud and Gilbert E. Donahue as the sixth in its Bibliographic Contributions Series. This reference tool, restricted primarily to books, incorporated some articles which appeared in special or topical issues of journals, anthologies, and encyclopedias but was limited necessarily to partial coverage of these sources of labor history. American Labor in Journals of History: A Bibliography is intended to supplement the Stroud and Donahue work in one important area.

Although well known to professional historians, the numerous local, state, regional, and subject history journals have often escaped the attention of the more specialized student of labor and industrial relations. In addition to the primary purpose of furnishing a comprehensive bibliography of articles related to labor history, the present study serves to indicate the need for additional investigations in many areas and to direct scholars to an extensive publishing outlet for their efforts. The emergence of Labor History has proved to be a welcome addition to the field but by no means pre-empts it.

In setting preliminary standards it was decided to limit the list of journals to be searched to those published in the United States. Complete runs of one hundred forty-eight periodicals were examined and ninety-eight of these contained articles suitable for inclusion in the bibliography. The compiler did not rely on indexes but actually examined the contents of every issue of every periodical included in the study through December, 1960. A separate appendix contains in alphabetical order the names of journals also searched but which produced no entries.

The 1961 edition of the Directory of Historical Societies in the United States and Canada was helpful in identification of currently published journals. Older, no-longer published periodicals were utilized whenever full runs could be obtained.

No claim is made that the journal list is exhaustive. Conspicuously absent are numerous smaller publications issued by local and county historical societies and by some religious and ethnic groups. The great difficulty in locating complete sets of this type of journal, many of which have been issued irregularly or for only brief periods of time, outweighed their usefulness. Furthermore, it seemed unlikely that most users of this bibliography would be in a better position to obtain them.

Journals of history published by religious denominations were included when available as were those issued by and for various ethnic groups. Although some of the ethnic group publications tended to be of a semipopular nature, they sometimes contained articles valuable to an understanding of the background of groups important in the American labor movement. Ethnic group articles in strictly historical journals were selected on this same premise and were omitted only when, in the judgment of the compiler there was no relationship, direct or indirect, to the labor subject.

A wide variation in the caliber of the journals is apparent. All of the general and regional journals and many of those published under state and local auspices are devoted to serious and scholarly articles. Wherever public funds are available in ample amounts, quality is usually, but not invariably, better. In some instances editorial policies and other considerations have compelled a journal to retain an outdated, antiquarian approach once typical of many of the more modern journals as well.

Alaska, Hawaii, Maine, Massachusetts, and South Dakota presently are not favored with journals of history on the state level. Connecticut is represented only by a bulletin and New Hampshire by an irregularly issued periodical which recently has not produced a volume a year. Several other states are struggling to establish periodicals which have been in existence only a few years.

In order that industrial Massachusetts, which like Maine and the other New England states claims some attention in the excellent New England Quarterly, be directly represented, the Proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society has been admitted to the bibliography. This venerable publication, never much concerned with labor history, now appears at irregular intervals in hard binding. Volume 72 embracing proceedings from October, 1957, to May, 1960, will not be issued until late in 1963 and could not be included. A preliminary report on tentative editorial plans did not disclose any forthcoming labor articles.

Articles chosen for inclusion in the bibliography were restricted to those dealing with labor in the United States and its possessions or with American labor in other countries. Those dealing with the trade union movement in Germany or with striking coal miners in Wales, for example, were not cited unless the author stressed some direct connection with the American labor movement.

Articles concerning slavery posed a special problem. American historians have given considerable attention to this subject, a condition reflected in the number of entries dealing with it. Careful selectivity was employed in including pieces touching on slavery, and decisions were often necessarily arbitrary. Since titles are frequently misleading, content was made the determining factor. Most articles treating abolition, politics and slavery, the slave trade, etc., were rejected. Articles covering the economics of slavery, working conditions under slavery, etc., were retained. In indexing, slavery articles restricted to a particular state or region were entered under the appropriate subheadings, but the number of entries under the general heading of slavery remains large. As might be expected, journals in agrarian southern states with relatively recent industrialization have been preoccupied with the slavery issue.

The above information was obtained from a review of the files of the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, and the Bureau of Reclamation, and is being furnished to you for your information.

Journals appear in the bibliography under 1960 titles in alphabetical order. Title changes and the names of predecessor journals in a direct line of descent are indicated in the heading along with the 1960 publisher and the inclusive dates of publication. Articles are listed under each periodical in the chronological order of their appearance.

A Subject Index has been prepared to increase the usefulness of the bibliography. Articles are numbered consecutively, totaling 903 entries in all. Each subject entry is followed by the numbers of the articles pertinent to it. Wherever possible, each article is indexed under category of workers, name of specific union, city or state, persons, etc. Each article is limited to a maximum of five index entries, a rule violated in only three or four special cases. The great majority are indexed under less than five entries. Here again many arbitrary decisions were necessary. All casual references to persons, unions, concepts, and events are not indexed. The name of Samuel Gompers, for instance, appears in many articles but index entries are made only for those in which he is given special attention. On the other hand, William Z. Foster is given an entry for the only article in which his name appears, although the relative emphasis given him might not warrant a separate entry otherwise. To some extent the length and content of the article itself determines the index entries. Occasionally entries have been made in the case of brief general essays which would have been omitted in longer, more comprehensive studies. Liberal use has been made of double entries and cross references.

A separate Picture Index follows the same pattern of numerical entries under alphabetically arranged subject headings.

Results of this bibliographical study suggest that labor and industrial relations history remains a relatively untapped resource in some states, including some important industrial ones. Some state journals have published no labor history articles; others have devoted surprisingly little space to the subject. With but few exceptions it was not until the depression of the 1930's that studies of more than a superficial nature began to appear.

Many persons contributed to the preparation of this bibliography. Chairmen of the Institute Library Committee, Professors Milton Derber (1961) and Adolf Sturmthal (1962), provided encouragement and support in the initial stages of planning. Professors William Howard Huff, Thomas Edward Ratcliffe, Jr., and Mr. Frank Rodgers of the University Library gave valuable assistance in obtaining many of the necessary materials. Mrs. Darlene Feurer typed and checked the text and indexes. Professor Barbara D. Dennis furnished editorial advice and supervision during the final stages of preparation.

A special debt is owed to Professor Archie Green who suggested the project and without whose generously contributed time, information, judgments, and advice the work could scarcely have been completed.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions and activities. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for transparency and accountability, particularly in financial matters. The text suggests that organizations should implement robust systems to track and document every aspect of their operations.

2. The second part of the document addresses the challenges associated with data management and security. It highlights the need for organizations to protect their sensitive information from unauthorized access and breaches. The text recommends the use of secure storage solutions and the implementation of strict access controls to ensure the integrity and confidentiality of the data.

3. The third part of the document focuses on the importance of regular audits and reviews. It states that periodic assessments are necessary to identify potential weaknesses and areas for improvement. The text encourages organizations to conduct thorough audits of their financial records, operational procedures, and data management practices to ensure compliance with relevant regulations and standards.

4. The fourth part of the document discusses the role of technology in enhancing organizational efficiency and effectiveness. It mentions that the adoption of modern software and tools can significantly streamline processes and reduce the risk of human error. The text suggests that organizations should invest in reliable technology solutions that can support their growth and operational needs.

5. The fifth part of the document emphasizes the importance of clear communication and collaboration within the organization. It states that effective communication is crucial for ensuring that all team members are aligned with the organization's goals and objectives. The text recommends the establishment of open communication channels and the promotion of a collaborative work environment.

6. The sixth part of the document discusses the importance of ongoing training and development for the workforce. It mentions that providing employees with the necessary skills and knowledge is essential for maintaining a competitive edge in the market. The text suggests that organizations should invest in training programs and offer opportunities for professional growth to their employees.

7. The seventh part of the document focuses on the importance of maintaining a strong corporate culture. It states that a positive and values-driven culture can significantly impact an organization's performance and reputation. The text recommends that organizations should clearly define their core values and ensure that these values are reflected in all aspects of their operations.

8. The eighth part of the document discusses the importance of staying up-to-date with industry trends and regulations. It mentions that organizations must be proactive in monitoring changes in the market and regulatory landscape to ensure compliance and adaptability. The text suggests that organizations should establish a system for tracking industry developments and consult with legal and regulatory experts as needed.

9. The ninth part of the document emphasizes the importance of maintaining accurate financial records and reporting. It states that transparent financial reporting is essential for building trust with stakeholders and investors. The text recommends that organizations should adhere to established accounting standards and provide regular, accurate financial statements.

10. The tenth part of the document discusses the importance of having a clear exit strategy in place. It mentions that organizations should consider the potential for future exit scenarios, such as mergers, acquisitions, or liquidation. The text suggests that organizations should develop a comprehensive exit strategy that outlines the steps to be taken in the event of a change of ownership or a decision to exit the market.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry must be supported by proper documentation, such as receipts or invoices, to ensure the integrity of the financial data.

In the second section, the author outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze data. This includes both qualitative and quantitative approaches, as well as the use of statistical tools to interpret the results. The goal is to provide a comprehensive overview of the research methodology employed in the study.

The third part of the document presents the findings of the research. It details the results of the data analysis, highlighting key trends and patterns that emerged from the study. The author also discusses the implications of these findings for the field of research and for future studies.

Finally, the document concludes with a summary of the main points and a discussion of the limitations of the study. The author acknowledges the challenges faced during the research process and offers suggestions for how these limitations might be addressed in future work.

1. The first step is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the situation, the people involved, and the resources available. It is important to gather all relevant information and to identify the key issues that need to be addressed.

2. The second step is to develop a plan. This involves setting clear goals and objectives, and identifying the steps that need to be taken to achieve them. It is important to consider the resources available and to identify any potential risks or challenges that may arise.

3. The third step is to implement the plan. This involves putting the plan into action and monitoring progress. It is important to communicate the plan to all relevant parties and to ensure that everyone is working towards the same goals.

4. The fourth step is to evaluate the results. This involves assessing the outcomes of the plan and identifying any areas for improvement. It is important to gather feedback from all relevant parties and to use this information to make any necessary adjustments.

5. The fifth step is to review the process. This involves reflecting on the overall experience and identifying any lessons learned. It is important to consider the strengths and weaknesses of the process and to use this information to improve future plans.

6. The sixth step is to communicate the results. This involves sharing the outcomes of the plan with all relevant parties and ensuring that everyone is aware of the progress made.

7. The seventh step is to celebrate success. This involves recognizing the achievements of all those who have contributed to the success of the plan and celebrating the results.

8. The eighth step is to maintain the results. This involves ensuring that the results of the plan are sustained over time and that any necessary adjustments are made.

9. The ninth step is to learn from the experience. This involves reflecting on the overall experience and identifying any lessons learned that can be used to improve future plans.

10. The tenth step is to share the results. This involves sharing the outcomes of the plan with a wider audience and ensuring that everyone is aware of the progress made.

1. The first step in the process of identifying a problem is to recognize that a problem exists. This is often done by comparing current performance with a desired state or goal. If there is a discrepancy, a problem is identified.

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

1. The first step in the process of identifying a problem is to define the problem. This involves identifying the symptoms and the underlying causes of the problem. Once the problem has been defined, the next step is to identify the stakeholders who are affected by the problem. This involves identifying the individuals, groups, and organizations that are impacted by the problem. The third step is to identify the resources that are available to address the problem. This involves identifying the personnel, equipment, and information that are needed to address the problem. The fourth step is to develop a plan of action. This involves identifying the specific steps that need to be taken to address the problem. The fifth step is to implement the plan of action. This involves carrying out the specific steps that have been identified in the plan of action. The sixth step is to evaluate the results of the plan of action. This involves assessing the effectiveness of the plan of action and identifying any areas for improvement. The seventh step is to communicate the results of the plan of action. This involves sharing the results of the plan of action with the stakeholders who are affected by the problem. The eighth step is to monitor the results of the plan of action. This involves tracking the progress of the plan of action and identifying any areas for improvement. The ninth step is to report the results of the plan of action. This involves providing a report on the results of the plan of action to the stakeholders who are affected by the problem. The tenth step is to review the results of the plan of action. This involves evaluating the overall effectiveness of the plan of action and identifying any areas for improvement.

the β phase of the polymer. The β phase is the more ordered phase and is characterized by a higher density and a higher melting point than the α phase. The β phase is also the more stable phase and is the one that is most commonly observed in nature. The α phase is the less ordered phase and is characterized by a lower density and a lower melting point than the β phase. The α phase is also the less stable phase and is the one that is most commonly observed in nature.

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations

$$\begin{aligned} & \frac{dx}{dt} = f(x, y, z), \\ & \frac{dy}{dt} = g(x, y, z), \\ & \frac{dz}{dt} = h(x, y, z), \end{aligned}$$

where f, g, h are continuous functions of x, y, z and satisfy the Lipschitz condition with respect to x, y, z .

2. In the second part of the paper we consider the problem of the uniqueness of solutions of the system of equations

$$\begin{aligned} & \frac{dx}{dt} = f(x, y, z), \\ & \frac{dy}{dt} = g(x, y, z), \\ & \frac{dz}{dt} = h(x, y, z), \end{aligned}$$

where f, g, h are continuous functions of x, y, z and satisfy the Lipschitz condition with respect to x, y, z .

1. The first step in the process of the development of a new product is the identification of a market need. This is often done through market research, which can be conducted in a variety of ways, including surveys, focus groups, and interviews. The goal is to understand what customers want and need, and to identify any gaps in the current market.

2. Once a market need has been identified, the next step is to develop a concept for a new product. This involves brainstorming ideas and creating a rough sketch of the product. The concept should be based on the market need and should be unique and innovative.

3. The third step is to create a prototype of the product. This is a physical model of the product that can be used to test the concept and to gather feedback from potential customers. The prototype should be made of a material that is easy to work with and that can be modified as needed.

4. The fourth step is to conduct a market test. This involves selling the prototype to a small group of potential customers and gathering feedback on their reactions. This can be done through a variety of methods, including direct sales, online surveys, and focus groups.

5. The final step is to launch the product. This involves creating a marketing plan and launching the product to the general public. The marketing plan should include a target audience, a budget, and a timeline for the launch.

1. The first step in the process of the investigation is to identify the problem. This is done by gathering information about the situation and the people involved. The next step is to analyze the information and determine the cause of the problem. This is done by looking at the data and trying to find patterns. The third step is to develop a plan of action. This is done by deciding what needs to be done to solve the problem. The fourth step is to implement the plan. This is done by putting the plan into action. The fifth step is to evaluate the results. This is done by looking at the data and seeing if the problem has been solved.

5. The fifth step in the process of the investigation is to evaluate the results. This is done by looking at the data and seeing if the problem has been solved.

6. The sixth step in the process of the investigation is to report the results. This is done by writing a report that describes the problem, the investigation, and the results. The report is then presented to the appropriate authorities.

7. The seventh step in the process of the investigation is to follow up on the results. This is done by checking back on the data and seeing if the problem has been solved. If not, the investigation is continued.

8. The eighth step in the process of the investigation is to draw conclusions. This is done by looking at the data and seeing if the problem has been solved. If not, the investigation is continued. The ninth step is to write a report. This is done by writing a report that describes the problem, the investigation, and the results. The report is then presented to the appropriate authorities.

1. What is the purpose of the study?

[illegible]

1. The following information is provided for the year ended 31 December 2014:

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to the study of the asymptotic behavior of the solutions of the system (1) as $t \rightarrow \infty$. It is shown that the solutions of the system (1) tend to zero as $t \rightarrow \infty$ if and only if the matrix A is Hurwitz.
